More info about speciality of this temple, legends and rituals:

The Mehandipur Balaji Temple is deeply rooted in local folklore and "tantric" traditions, creating an atmosphere unlike any other Hindu shrine. Below are the more detailed specifics regarding its legends and the precise sequence of rituals.

1. The Divine Trinity & Their Specialities

The temple is governed by a spiritual hierarchy of three deities, each with a distinct role:

* Balaji (Child Hanuman): He is the Supreme Ruler of the temple. In this child form, he is believed to be exceptionally compassionate yet firm in his justice. His idol has a small hole in the chest from which a continuous stream of water flows, which is collected as sacred Charnamrit.

* Shri Pret Raj Sarkar: He is the "King of Spirits." He acts as the Chief Justice who hears the grievances of the possessed. He is the one who decides the "punishment" for malevolent entities.

* Shri Kotwal Bhairav Ji: He is the "Police Chief." He executes the orders given by Pret Raj Sarkar and ensures that no negative energy escapes the temple grounds.

2. Detailed Rituals: The Three Petitions

Visiting Mehandipur involves a strict sequence of offerings. It is not just a Darshan (viewing) but a legal-like process of "filing a case."

Ritual	The Procedure	Significance
Darkhast	Buying two plates of 4–5 small laddoos from local shops. You offer them to the priests, who throw them into the sacred ritual fire (Havan).	Plate 1: To mark your presence. Plate 2: help for your specific problem.
Arzi	A larger offering consisting of 1.25 kg Laddoos, 2.25 kg Urad Dal, and 4.25 kg Boiled Rice.	This is an "Official Application" specific to Raj Sarkar and Kotwal Bhairav .
Sawamani	A grand offering of 51 kg of food (usually Halwa-Puri or Laddus).	This is a "Thanksgiving" ritual performed when your wish is fulfilled or the problem is solved.

> The "Leftover" Ritual: After offering Darkhast to all three deities, you must eat exactly two laddoos from the leftovers. The remaining portion is circled around your head 7 times anti-clockwise and thrown away. Crucially, you must not look back at the discarded portion.

3. The Legend of the Self-Manifested Idol

The origin of the temple is tied to a 1000-year-old legend:

* The Vision: The ancestor of the first Mahant (priest) was a great devotee of Hanuman. In a dream, he saw a dense forest where three deities appeared. When he woke up and went to the spot (the Aravalli hills), he found the self-manifested (Swayambhu) idol of Balaji emerging from the rocks.

* The Ruler's Daughter: Another popular legend mentions a regional king whose daughter was possessed and became mute.

Traditional medicine failed, but after the priest performed rituals invoking the power of Balaji at this spot, she was instantly cured.

The king then funded the construction of the initial temple.

4. The "Court" Atmosphere

The temple operates as a "Spiritual Court":

* The Hazoori Aarti: During the evening Aarti, it is said that the power of Balaji is at its peak. This is when the "hearing" of the cases happens.

Many visitors witness people screaming or performing unusual physical movements; these are considered signs of the negative spirits struggling under the divine pressure.

* Silence and Discipline: Unlike other temples where bells ring and people chant loudly, here a heavy silence is often maintained to respect the gravity of the "healing" process.

5. Strict Rules for Devotees

To ensure protection from the high energy of the temple, several traditional rules must be followed:

* The "No-Carry" Rule: You must finish or discard all food, water, or sweets within the village boundary. Bringing even a single drop of water from Mehandipur back home is strictly forbidden, as it is believed the negative energy "attached" to the offerings might follow you.

* The No-Turn Rule: When leaving the temple or the village, you must never turn back to look at the temple or the idols.

* Sensory Discipline: Avoid using perfumes, scented oils, or heavily fragrant soaps before visiting, as strong scents are believed to attract wandering spirits.

The Mehandipur Balaji Temple is truly a unique subject, especially given how it blends ancient spiritual traditions with a very "legalistic" approach to healing.

The way it maintains its own internal "court system" makes it a fascinating case study in regional history and cultural practices.

* A small detail for records:

The temple is situated in a valley between two hills of the Aravalli Range, which is why the local area is often referred to as "Ghata" (meaning a valley or mountain pass).
